One of Martin Lind's Beautiful Knives

Posted by wickededge - 29 Aug 2012 11:56

Martin was kind enough to send me this beautiful knife that I couldn't resist fiddling with even though it came already looking great:

I'm hoping he'll jump on and tell us a little but more about it. What I can add now is that it is beautiful, well balanced and feels great in my hand.

WOWZA!!

Edit: I should have saved my wowza for the 2nd pic!!

Sure is fun to throw it up on the TV screen and look at it.

Nice lookin Beautiful knife.

Hi Clay.

im realy glad you liked it

so what can i say about the knife, its a damascus blade and the scales are pear trees (almost sure)

its a small nice hunting knife with great balance, and now realy sharp I suppose (now with a weps edge on it) the scales got i from a very old cover for jewelery box, here in sweden.

i hope you use it when you go hunting

Best regards

Martin lind

Beautiful blade, beautiful handle, a very beautiful knife. In particular, I really like the sweep of the handle in the bolster area.

That is one GORGEOUS knife ! I love the patterns in the Damascus steel and the wood handles, very nice pairing indeed.

I (up until about a year ago that is) used to make Native American "Style" Flutes from all kinds of wood, bamboo, and even Urban Pine (PVC), and always treasured a piece of special wood like this.....man, I would have loved to find a piece of it big enough to make a flute from.....pair that wood with some inlaid crushed Turquoise and it would surely be eye candy. I still fiddle with the flutes a bit, but now that I have my WES Pro-Pack II, I am spending time sharpening, LOL.
